THE AUTHOR & PUBLISHER

ABOUT HER WORK

www.cauzingelevation.com

In November 2006, Author Marie Antionette released her debut title A Girl Named Job with a vanity press printer. Unsatisfied with the results and wanting more out of her works, within a year she pulled the book. In 2009, she re-released it under her own imprint, Cauzing Elevation Publishing, LLC. During her hiatus, Marie learned the industry of self publishing and marketing which enabled her to gain the benefits, control and exposure best suiting her literary goals. As a multi-genre author, to her credit she has published 7 of her own titles, 7 titles by authors under her company imprint, has been recognized by one of the industries top literary resources "Readers Digest" for her debut title A Girl Named Job, has interviewed with various literary periodicals and Blog Talk Radio host; over a 10 year span she has hosted and has been a guest author at multiple book signing events throughout NJ, NY and PA including The African American Cultural Festival held every August in Trenton, NJ, The Harlem Book Fair, independent book sellers and Barnes & Noble alike. Her current titles are, A Girl Named Job, The Cook Chronicles Three Generations of Poets, The Struggle, Signs of Endurance, We Didn't Know, Keep Ya' Hands To Ya' Self and Beyond The Struggle (Rel. 5.22.16).

"Reading should be entertaining, educational, elevating or all three!" ~Author Publisher Marie Antionette

Born and raised in Trenton, NJ, Marie Antionette grew up watching her mother (Marsha) write daily. "My mom could write at least a notebook a day." Secretly, Marie did the same. At the age of 16, Marie inherited a treasure which to her confirmed she too had a place in the literary world. It was her grandfathers (Williams) WWII Journal, filled with exquisite poems and short stories. It was so well preserved and mind-blowing, Marie declared that day she would publish it but never imagined it would be under her own imprint. As an avid reader herself, Marie realized her secret was more like a family trait passed down through generations. As a mother of 3 sons, Marie Antionette finds balance between both of her worlds and is encouraged by the memories of family members passed and her children that #CauzingElevation is what she was born to do.
